THE CRUSADE AGAINST THE BETTING HOUSES AT LIVERPOOL.

EDWARD RICHARDSON, the landlord of the Saddle Vaults beerhouse, Market-street, was summoned on an information charging him with keeping his house to be used for the purpose of betting. Mr. Walter supported the information, and Mr. Cobb appeared for the defendant, who did not appear.—A young man named Westcott, who deposed that he was a police-officer, said that he visited the defendant's house in company with another officer, on the afternoon of Friday, the 7th ult. There were four or five people there, and the defendant behind the counter in conversation with his customers. Witness got into conversation with him about the Liverpool Cup, and bet him the price of Dutchbeers. The defendant took his book from his pocket and said he would give witness £5. Witness asked him if he would give £7, but the defendant said "No." Witness took the bet and put half-a-crown down, which the defendant, after booking the bet, put in his pocket. Witness said his name was Westcott. He saw the defendant make a mark with other people, and only saw money laid once.—By Hugh Gladstone: I can't say that this money was ever bet. Cross-examined by Mr. Cobb: How long have you been a sporting character?—Witness: Since I have been put on the duty. I was put on by Mr. Kehoe. I was in plain clothes. I did not say I came from Major Gregg. Perhaps I may have done so, as a sport. I have never been abroad, except in the police force. I don't know what the defendant wrote in the book. I have betted before on my own account.—By Mr. Gladstone: That was before I was in the police force.—Hugh McAllan, another police-officer, corroborated the evidence of the previous witness.—Cross-examined by Mr. Cobb: I have got a pair of spectacles and glasses before them.—Mr. Cobb: I got paid my expenses for going to the house. I have been to the house on other occasions, but had only seen betting once.—Westcott was recalled, and deposed that the half-crown with which he made the bet was given to one of the Corporation officers, who was in the police-office. He had been three or four times to the defendant's house, but there had not been betting on every occasion.—Mr. Cobb contended that there was no case within the meaning of the Act.

Mr. Robertson Gladstone said: With regard to this case, I believe we are both of the same opinion, though I may be a little stronger in my views than you are. I am of opinion that this is not a case coming under the Act for the suppression of betting houses. That Act of Parliament was intended for the suppression of an evil then existing. I look upon such betting as has been spoken of in this case as incidental to a beerhouse, but the business of the police is to suppress the vice itself, not any incident thereto. Therefore, I do not think that the case comes within the meaning of the Act. With regard to the mode of procuring a conviction, I must say that, without at all calling in question the reputation of Mr. Kehoe, who no doubt is a good officer, and was acting under the orders of his superiors, I must say that I consider the course most objectionable, if not wicked. A person was put to perform a duty, and was instructed not only himself to break the law, but to attempt to make another person do likewise. Unless we can conceive somebody of its virtue in doing such a thing, it would be better for it to be left entirely to itself. I have no idea of adding crime to crime. There are in such cases as this many means of obtaining information of what is wrong. The officer stated that he had been watching the house from day to day. It would be perfectly competent for him to do that, and I do not see how his action in doing so could induce the Bench to convict. As to the plan, however, of calling upon any servant of the Corporation or officer of the police to go and do what is palpably wrong, is the mere purpose of convicting another person of what is wrong, and of inflicting punishment on him, while, at the same time, according to my judgment, wicked course of conduct. As Mr. Hyslop will tell you, we think that the case does not come under the Act. The case is dismissed.

Mr. Hyslop agreed with Mr. Gladstone as to the case not coming under the law affecting betting houses.
